

Introducing:

SAIDIE MAY, PIONEER OF EARLY 20TH CENTURY COLLECTING

A new book about a visionary who made her aspirations come true:

- She studied art with the best French painters of the early 20th century and sent their canvases back to the United States to introduce them to the American public through museums.
- She brought the First work by Pablo Picasso to the United States.
- She saved two famous European artists from being killed in the Holocaust during WWII. They became the catalysts for the formation of the American Abstract Art Movement
- She created one of the first Children's Museums in the United States.
- She built an art study center for the public located in the Baltimore Museum of Art where the public could view art and make their own creations based on what they learned.

Written and published by Mrs. May's great grand niece, Susan Helen Adler, an art historian and teacher, this creative non-fiction chronicles the life and travels of Saidie Adler May and her sister, Blanche Adler; both generous benefactors of the Baltimore Museum of Art and other museums in the United States.

Available from the author at susalinasail@aol.com or by phone: 410-580-0670. A limited edition of 2,000 books with 318 pages, 138 pictures and a catalogue of important works in Mrs. May's collection.

Retails for $20

